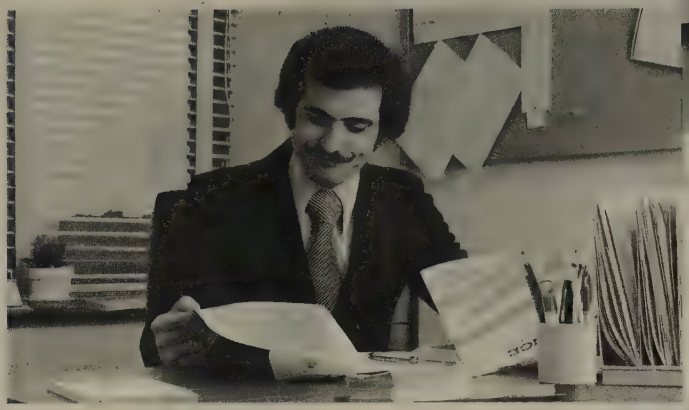
Are you requesting reprints from this many authors...



...and getting this many reprints?

It's easy to understand why. We are all busier than we used to be. Scientific authors and their secretaries are no exception. Maybe that's why so many of your reprint requests go unanswered these days. People are just too busy to notice the little postcard you've sent. Or they've got more important things to do than address envelopes.

On the other hand, a Request-A-Print® card seldom goes unanswered. It's the only reprint request card that:

. . . is distinctively designed to attract the author's attention

. . . gives the author a ready-to-use pressure sensitive label preprinted with your return address

. . . gives you a record of all reprints requested

. . . gives the author a record of all reprints sent

. . . saves so much clerical time and effort—continuous break-apart forms provide maximum typing efficiency

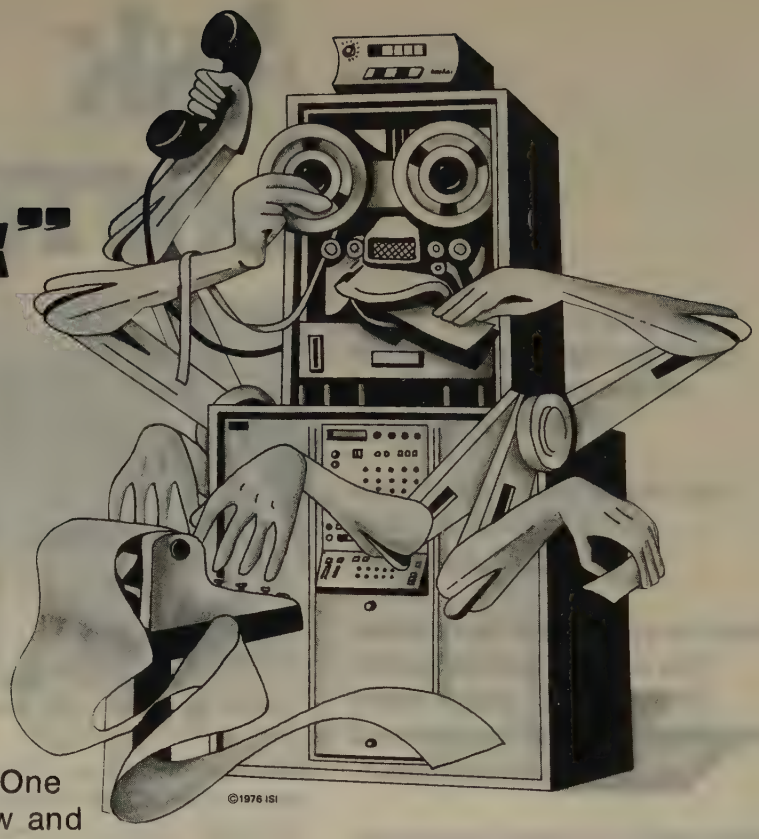
every "Gimmick" should do as much as the SCI® does



Over the years librarians have handed our Science Citation Index® its share of knocks. Some in earnest, others in fun. One put-down we still hear now and then calls the SCI "an ego gimmick researchers use for counting the citations to their published papers." Only nowadays most librarians smile when they say that. Because they know what the SCI really is: a comprehensive and remarkably current index to the editorial output of nearly 2,600 science journals. A flexible, easy-to-use system in which scientists and librarians alike readily locate relevant information through citation, title-word, author or organization searches. In other words, quite some "gimmick". So if you—scientist or librarian—have any serious doubts about the Science Citation Index, maybe it's time to write us for information. Or better yet, to discover for yourself what the SCI is good for besides citation-counting. You and your colleagues can do that right on your premises, through a workshop led by one of our information specialists. Without cost or obligation, of course. Just use the coupon to let us know you like the idea. We'll be in touch.

Please have an ISI information specialist contact me to arrange a Science Citation Index Workshop here.

Ask Lorraine:

"Can you give me 20 or 30 good background articles on the general topic of my new project?"

"Are there more scientific authors in New York or London?"

"How many people have cited the paper I published in Science last year? Have there been critical comments or corrections?"

"What other current methods are there for synthesizing this compound?"

"Has more information or data on this subject been published recently?"

"How many scientists in organizations competing with us published articles last year? What are their names?"

"Is this research necessary, or has someone already done it?"

Lorraine Derbyshire, ISI Search Specialist

Ask Lorraine or any other ISI® search specialist questions like these about science or the social sciences. And, if anybody can, she'll search out the answer.

ISI search specialists are experts at taking your question and developing a strategy of literature searching that provides a maximum of information in minimum time. And they're backed up by the entire line of ISI services designed to find what you're after—whether it was published 10 years or 10 days ago. They also have at their fingertips a variety of indexes and reference works from sources outside ISI.

How do you start a search? It's easy. Just give Lorraine a call (215/923-3300) or mail in the coupon below. With your answers to a few brief questions, she will have your personal, custom-tailored search quickly underway. For only $25 per hour (3-hour minimum). You tell us when to stop.
